Conquistador

Conquistadors (/kʰnʰk(w)?stʰdʰʰrz/, US also /-ʰkiʰs-, kʰʰʰʰ-/) or conquistadores (Spanish: [koʰkistaʰðoʰes]; Portuguese: [kõkiʰtʰʰðoʰʰʰ, kõkistʰʰdoʰis];

Conquistadors (, US also) or conquistadores (Spanish: [koʰkistaʰðoʰes]; Portuguese: [kõkiʰtʰʰðoʰʰʰ, kõkistʰʰdoʰis]; lit. 'conquerors') were Spanish and Portuguese colonizers who explored, traded with and conquered parts of the Americas, Africa, Oceania and Asia during the Age of Discovery. Sailing beyond the Iberian Peninsula, they established numerous colonies and trade routes, and brought much of the New World under the dominion of Spain and Portugal.

After Christopher Columbus's arrival in the West Indies in 1492, the Spanish, usually led by hidalgos from the west and south of Spain, began building a colonial empire in the Caribbean using colonies such as Santo Domingo, Cuba, and Puerto Rico as their main bases. From 1519 to 1521, Hernán Cortés led the Spanish conquest of the Aztec Empire...

Los Conquistadores were a villainous jobber professional wrestling tag team in the World Wrestling Federation (WWF), consisting of two masked wrestlers known as One (or Spanish Uno for "one") and Two (or Spanish Dos for "two"). The original team consisted of José Estrada Sr. and Jose Luis Rivera.

Several other wrestlers made use of the gimmick in 2000 and 2003. Edge and Christian and the Hardy Boyz both won the WWF World Tag Team Championship as Los Conquistadores, although their reigns were later credited under their actual team names.

The 1973–74 San Diego Conquistadors season was the second season in franchise history. During the offseason, the Conquistadors not only moved away from the Peterson Gym to the Golden Hall in the hopes of finding better luck with gaining fans there despite it having less seating by comparison, but they also acquired legendary Los Angeles Lakers center Wilt Chamberlain with the intention of using him as a player-coach for their franchise, though a judge later ruled that he could only coach for the team and not play for them. As a result of that ruling, he subsequently left a chunk of the coaching duties to assistant coach Stan Albeck since Chamberlain proved to not have much interest in coaching basketball as he did playing it. The team finished the season with a tied record for fourth place...

The 1972–73 San Diego Conquistadors season was the first season of the San Diego Conquistadors in the American Basketball Association. The Conquistadors were the first and only expansion team created for the ABA, who were made to make the league have 10 teams after the league previously lost both The Floridians and the Pittsburgh Condors franchises earlier in the season (with both teams ironically looking into San Diego as a relocation option earlier on), with Dr. Leonard Bloom being granted a team by the ABA for $1 million. However, a feud with Peter Graham, the proprietor of the San Diego Sports Arena, due to Graham being bitter for not being granted the San Diego ABA team meant that the Conquistadors would play their games in the 3,200 capacity Peterson Gym instead. Their first game ever...

The 1974–75 San Diego Conquistadors season was the third and final full season of play for the Conquistadors in the American Basketball Association. While the team was finally was able to play in the San Diego Sports Arena due to the franchise being able to resolve something with proprietor Peter Graham by this time, the Conquistadors still floundered both on the court and in the box office, with Wilt Chamberlain having left the team's coaching staff after the previous season due to his increasing lack of care in being a head coach without playing basketball on his end. They finished fifth in points per game at 109.9, but dead last in points allowed at 115.5 per game. One of the most notable games they played was against the New York Nets in a quadruple-overtime game on February 14, winning...
