1970s South Bronx building fires

at 83". The New York Times. Retrieved April 4, 2025. Roberts, Sam (February 19, 2006). "By 2025, Planners See a Million New Stories in the Crowded City";

The 1970s South Bronx building fires, sometimes referred to as simply the Bronx fires, were a series of fires that severely damaged the South Bronx, destroying more than 80 percent of the existing buildings in the area. Nearly ten years of continuous fires burned throughout the South Bronx. While unparalleled in their scope, these fires were part of the high rates of fire and arson afflicting cities nationwide during the 1970s.

While most of the fires were the result of arson by landlords recruiting Bronx residents to start fires, the South Bronx fires were not a singular, coordinated event. Rather, the fires were the product of dozens of social and economic factors: redlining and disinvestment, the economic crises of the 1970s, a newly available property insurance program, poor fiscal management by the city of New York, decades of housing segregation, budget cuts targeted towards poor communities, and the overcrowding of under-funded areas due to gentrification and displacement all set up the conditions that fueled fires and the feeble state response.
