Promoting Well-Being and Normalcy for Foster Youth

Being in foster care can be challenging and feel anything but normal.

Young people in foster care need healthy experiences, nurturing relationships and opportunities to make decisions to thrive and prepare for adulthood.

The Preventing Sex Trafficking and Strengthening Families Act of 2014 is a federal law that promotes well-being, permanent relationships and normalcy for young people in foster care.

States are required to promote foster youth participation in age and developmentally appropriate extracurricular, social and cultural activities.

States are also required to provide caregivers more decision-making authority in everyday choices that affect young people in their care.
